

Wild Seedlings

This photograph captures the stillness of hanging plants, suspended without rush or struggle. The image reflects the Taoist idea of patience and the natural flow of life, where things unfold in their own time. Just like the plant hanging freely, it's not about being stuck or forced into motion, it's about existing as it is. Taoism teaches us that sometimes the best thing to do is simply wait and be present in the moment, so this image invites viewers to embrace the quiet strength found in stillness and the value of letting things be, without pushing or rushing.

